So many people so obsessed with their beloved Johnny Depp, they didn't even bother to find out what the original case was about, nor what would constitute grounds for appeal. Much as I detest NGN, this is the correct result, as was the original ruling. Justice has been served.

You are right but that doesn't mean the justice system isn't seriously flawed. He has never been charged or convicted of any domestic abuse against her therefore the media labelling him a wife beater should be considered slander.

My ex has never been charged or convicted of any domestic abuse against me, yet he was physically, emotionally, verbally and financially abusive towards me for the best part of two decades. The police weren't interested when I tried to report him.

She dismissed her charges of domestic violence against him after they reached a 7 million dollar settlement, & they were dismissed with prejudice- I'm sure you know what that means. Do you think the media should be able to say whatever they like about anybody with total immunity-

Amber Heard was not a named party in the libel case and was not attempting to bring charges against Depp during the case. It was a civil dispute between Depp and NGN. Heard's actions were not the subject of the trial; Depp's actions were.

I am well aware of this. & I'm well aware how difficult it is to win a libel suit. All that aside do you honestly think it's right that a media outlet can print that someone is a wife beater based solely on someone else's accusations?

The S*n has lost libel cases before, so the law doesn't just let anyone get away with printing anything. The allegations against Depp were substantial enough that his case failed. It is highly likely that he was advised against the action, but his hubris got the better of him.

Defending yourself is hubris? Haha. Yeah he was extremely unlikely to succeed & probably shouldn't have proceeded but probability doesn't equal guilt & none of this answers the question: is it really OK that the media can do this to somebody based solely on someone's accusations.

No. Thinking he could manipulate a court the way he's manipulated the media and his fans into believing that he was innocent when the evidence

LOL almost all media regarding this case is pro-Heard..Certainly his fans are loyal, no doubt.. (as are her few fans) but you're reaching claiming it's due to his manipulation 🤔 I'd ask you to back up those claims but I think I'm done here. 🙄
